KENYA

Land of Mystery and Marvels

Overlooking the Savannah – please notice the refreshments. LOL!!!

Good morning, ALL!!!! Here I am again bombarding you with information about our up-coming adventure! First of all, if you're not used to flying or tend to find your legs or feet swelling up, my strong suggestion is to invest in a pair of compression sox. Seriously! We're going to have 2 long, back-to-back flights. As an example, NY to London is 6 hours. We will have a bit of a layover in London, but we then fly London to Nairobi, which is 8-3/4 hours. The first time I did that, my one foot swelled up so much it was hanging over my shoe!!! ... and I'm used to flying!!! It did resolve itself overnight, but was a bit scary!!! Now I wear compression sox on most long flights.

As mentioned before, luggage space is limited. One large soft-side suitcase, one carry-on, and perhaps a camera bag. This VERY short clip will show you the amount of space we have in the vehicles. Don't blink or you'll miss it! (Some of you returning "Hamlet Trekkers" may recognize this scene in front of the Norfolk Hotel. Sorry guys, we won't be staying there this time. They had a major fire and the status of the property is unknown.) Double click on the picture and you'll see the back of the vehicles where our luggage will be stowed.

While our luggage is being loaded, we'll meet our drivers/guides/interpreters. These guys are there to help with any questions you may have. They love their country and are proud to welcome you to it! They will name any animals we encounter and answer anything you'd like to ask. BUT I cannot stress enough that you MUST listen to them once we're in the bush. If they tell you to roll up the windows, roll up the windows! There's a reason. If you want them to stop so you can get a better picture of something, they will stop. If they stop the vehicle for no apparent reason, be patient. They have a reason and you'll see it! They will also help with your luggage and anything else you can imagine. That's why we tip them at the end of the safari.

Once again, I PROMISE you do NOT need to buy any special "safari" clothing! This is a photo of "The Hamlet Trekkers" ... please notice all the "special safari" clothing we're wearing!!! LOL!!! The object is to really enjoy this experience, not worry about who's wearing what!

Now go enjoy the photos and think about how you'll take your own photos and enjoy something you may never experience again! (Unless you want to go on the next trip???) I remind you I'm here to answer your questions. Email or call me.
